Staalplaat Soundsystem (NL/D/GB)

Staalplaat – for more than twenty-five years this name has stood for one of the most exciting independent experimental music labels. Seven years ago, Staalplaat founder Geert-Jan Hobijn joined forces with Carsten Stabenow, founder of the German Media Art Festival “garage”, and the artist Carlo Crovato, who works under the pseudonym plastic-electric, to launch Staalplaat Soundsystem. In this constellation, Staalplaat creates acoustic installations of gigantic dimensions: converted household appliances and various other utensils, washing machines, floor polishing machines, vacuum cleaners, kitchen blenders and fans are transformed into wondrous sound generators that perform together in large-scale machine orchestras.

International Festival (S)

International Festival was founded by architect Tor Lindstrand and choreographer and performer Mårten Spångberg in 2004. International Festival operates between architecture, performance, video, theory and pure entertainment: A temporary kitchen was installed at Berlin’s Haus der Kulturen der Welt; at the Tensta Konsthall outside Stockholm a parking space was converted into a public piazza, on other occasions a perfume was produced, videos were shot (After Pollock, 2005), and a publishing house and a special university, the International Festival University, were founded. International Festival is a project that works in very different cultural contexts and that constitutes an open platform with collaborators in more than nine countries that is open for a host of disciplines. “International Festival is all you could ever want it to be.”

plan b are the British artists Sophia New and Daniel Belasco Rogers. They work together as a duo as well as assisting on each other’s solo works. plan b often develop performances specifically for a particular context or place. In their durational performances, they explore themes such as the dynamics of conversation, singing, confessing and cycling. They also make installations, web streamed performances, video pieces, locative media projects, radio pieces and lead workshops. In 2004 they were artists in residence in Podewil, Berlin. Daniel had a residency at the Akademie der Künste, Berlin in 2006. Since the founding of plan b, their work has been shown in Berlin, London, Cardiff, Bristol, Liverpool, Braunschweig, Prague, Gent, Helsinki, as well as other cities. In 2006 they presented “My Home is my Castle” as part of the CAMPSHOW Steiermark for steirischer herbst.

Hannah Hurtzig (D)

Since 1999, Hannah Hurtzig has headed the Mobile Akademie, or Mobile Academy, an art project with changing focal topics ranging between field research, course offerings, and actionism: “Die Zukunft der Arbeit” (Schauspielhaus Bochum 1999); “Der Flüchtling: Dienstleistungen an Unerwünschten” (Volksbühne am Rosa-Luxemburg-Platz Berlin 2003); “Fakelore – Konstruktionen und Erfindungen urbaner Folklore” (Hebbel am Ufer, Berlin 2004); “Geister, Gespenster, Phantome und die Orte an denen sie leben” (TR Warszawa, Warsaw 2006), among others. With the Tulip House production office (with Anselm Franke) she develops models for representing memory, space and rhetoric that tour public locations in the form of installations: e.g. “Filiale für Erinnerung auf Zeit” (Hamburg 2000), “Information Retrieval – Dialogues on Archiving” (British Museum, London 2001); “Kiosk für nützliches Wissen” (since 2003). Since 2001 she has been building a constantly growing audio-visual archive on the subject of “Narratives of places, cities and territories”. The installation and performance “Black market for useful knowledge and non-knowledge”, a space for collective learning and production, is concerned with other, new formats of conveying knowledge. The black market has already been performed seven times and will be billing at

Baktruppen (N)

Established in 1986 in Norway, Baktruppen's performances are collective creations often full of humour and surprising quirks. For 20 years they have produced a diverse range of productions and have performed at most of the major contemporary theatre venues and festivals across Europe as well as presenting working in North America, East Asia and Africa. Their unique approach to the process of devising work, their desire to honestly engage with their audience and, not least, the humor and enjoyment in their work, have made them one Europe's most important and innovative theatre groups.

Nature Theater of Oklahoma (USA)

Nature Theater of Oklahoma is a New York based performance group under the direction of Pavol Liska and Kelly Copper. Since "Poetics: a ballet brut", the first dance piece created as an ensemble, Nature Theater of Oklahoma has been devoted to making the work they don't know how to make, putting themselves in impossible situations, and working from out of their own ignorance and unease. They strive to create an unsettling live situation that demands total presence from everyone in the room. They use the readymade material around us, found space, overheard speech, and observed gesture, and through extreme formal manipulation, and superhuman effort, they affect in their work a shift in the perception of everyday reality that extends beyond the site of performance and into the world in which we live.

Mathilde Monnier (F)

Mathilde Monnier is currently regarded as one of the greatest choreographers in Europe. Fundamentally original, purposefully questioning the relationships between the person, the universe and others, Monnier's approach doesn't make a case for a radical rupture from the history of dance, but tries to find, in intimacy, the basis of movement both modern and in contact with the real. Neither abstract nor minimalist, Mathilde Monnier distrusts improvisation, but incites her dancers to seek and create by leaving them a greater margin of liberty and more possibilities for individual expression. It is from this origin that is nourished not only Mathilde Monnier's approach, but also her style – formal rigor in the choreography, coupled with an interest in movement originating both from virtuosity and kinesiology. In 1994, she was appointed as director of the Centre Chorégraphique National de Montpellier. It's the beginning of various collaborations with different artists: the composers Heiner Goebbels, Louis Sclavis, erikm, the writer Christine Angot, the philosopher Jean-Luc Nancy, and more recently, the french singer Katerine.

andcompany&Co. (D/NL/IL/KZ/USA)

andcompany&Co. is an international performance collective founded by Alexander Karschnia, Nicola Nord and Sascha Sulimma in 2003 to collaborate with other artist partners between theatre and theory, politics and practice. Their performances are a humorous game of facts and fictions that musically condense fragments of aesthetic and philosophical drafts of the twentieth century, remixing them to create their own political statement. Their approach works on the principle of remixing and re-animation, a principle that the &Co. abbreviation in the network's name already implies: the site-specific test labs and performance lectures that precede or accompany the plays are called &Co. LABs, e.g. for "Revolutionary Timing" with Noah Fischer at the AT&T building in New York in 2006.

Theater im Bahnhof (A)

The Graz-based Theater im Bahnhof (TiB) is Austria's largest professional free theatre company. According to its own definition, TiB sees itself as a contemporary popular theatre and has from the outset focused on Austrian identity between tradition and pop. For TiB, the principle of popular theatre demands an all-out subjective approach. Self-developed plays have been the theatre's main identity from the beginning. It is constantly changing its methods of work so as to create living, varied theatre.

Orthographe (I)

The Italian Orthographe group was founded by the multi-talented photo artist Alessandro Panzavolta in 2004. His photographic experiments with the pinhole camera and performers led to the first work "Orthographe de la physionomie en mouvement", that was shown at the 37th Biennale di Venezia (2005) curated by Romeo Castellucci. He is currently working on two new pieces. "Tentativi di Volo", another work designed for the pinhole camera, focuses on the attempt to fly in one's dreams. The other piece, "Memory", is a musical project created in cooperation with the musician Lorenzo Senni. It involves an acoustic treatment of the asymmetric repetitions of prime numbers. This piece is being developed for an empty hall in the twilight for the Colline Torinesi Festival.
